Fixing FCC Ruling Vital to Competitiveness of Minorities in Internet Economy

Jerome Buckley By Jerome Buckley, Publisher The Michigan Banner

Saginaw - Minority individuals and businesses are among the most important demographic for Internet use, especially on mobile devices.

African Americans below the age of 30 use Twitter at far higher rates than white users, 40 percent to 28 percent, according to a 2014 Pew study.

African Americans use smartphones at the same rate as white users, catching up after years of lagging.

Hispanic smartphone users are 17 points more likely to get on the Internet than non-Hispanic users, and 45 percent of Hispanic users are mobile-dominant Internet users compared with 38 percent of non-Hispanics, according to a 2014 Experian study.

Minorities will be directly affected by what happens to the Internet in coming years – and whether Michigan's congressional delegation will fix a decision by the federal government to place the Internet under heavy bureaucratic oversight.

Recently, the Federal Communications and open Internet under Title II regulations.

Designed for public utilities, these rules are incompatible with the dynamic, fast-paced, rapidly evolving Internet.

The FCC's decision now threatens to slow the rapid progress of innovations and entrepreneurship that form the backbone of the Internet economy.

The idea that the Internet must remain free. open and accessible is vital to sustaining and increasing technology use among minorities, especially in an economy that demands tech savvy users who can share information and collaborate across platforms.

One critical key to achieving this goal is the continuation of investment and innovations in broadband and wireless technology. The FCC ruling is already sending a chill down the backs of broadband carriers, Internet service providers and other companies that are building the backbone of the Internet economy.

And that investment needs to happen in areas that aren't fully served and in communities that don't always have reliable access to the Internet.

Only 62 percent of minority households have some form of broadband connection at home, according to the 2014 Pew study. A large explanation for that is because the infrastructure necessary to expand broadband access still remains to be built in many predominantly minority communities.

Additionally, the FCC rule will likely lead to higher state and local fees for access, costs that consumers and minority owned businesses would be forced to pay for. The Progressive Policy Institute estimates the total increase in taxes and fees at $11 billion a year.

The FCC ruling amounts to another hurdle for minorities to compete in today's Internet economy.

Minority leaders across the nation are increasingly calling on Congress to provide a solution to this self-inflicted problem.

Michigan's congressional leaders should Commission decided to place the already free step up so individuals and businesses can compete fairly and achieve success.

CMU Chemistry Professor and Students Leading the Fight Against Tuberculosis

Mount Pleasant - Benjamin Swarts, assistant professor of chemistry in Central Michigan University's College of Science and Technology, has been awarded a $420,085 grant from the National Institutes of Health along with Peter Woodruff, assistant professor of chemistry at the University of Southern Maine.

Led by Swarts, the NIH grant will support the strain of bacteria that causes tuberculosis.

TB is a major global health issue. According to Swarts, one-third of the world's population is infected with TB, and the emergence of growing, urgent public health concern.

"Our research focus is to develop a class of molecules — derivatives of a unique sugar called trehalose — that will be useful for deaths per year, predominantly in developing studying M. tuberculosis," Swarts said.

"Trehalose made by the bacteria is so cannot live, or infect humans, without it.

or need trehalose, which makes the sugar derivatives very attractive targets for developing new methods of TB diagnostics and treatments."

Overall, M. tuberculosis is the world's deadliest bacterial pathogen with tuberculosis being the second most common cause of death from infectious disease behind HIV and AIDS.

TB typically attacks the lungs but can also their research of Mycobacterium tuberculosis, affect other parts of the body. It is spread through the air when people who have an active TB infection cough, sneeze or transmit respiratory fluids.

General signs and symptoms include fever, drug-resistant strains of M. tuberculosis is a chills, night sweats, decreased appetite, weight loss and fatigue.

There are approximately 10 million new cases of active TB disease and 1.5 million parts of the world.

"As a research community, we urgently important to its survival that the bacterium need to learn more about how M. tuberculosis infection works in order to accelerate the Humans, on the other hand, do not make creation of new approaches to TB prevention and treatment," Swarts said.

> "In recent decades, effective TB treatment has become difficult due to the unusual structure and chemical composition of the mycobacterial cell wall, which hinders the entry of drugs and makes many antibiotics ineffective."

FROM P 14, CMU Chemistry...

Drug-resistant tuberculosis is much more difficult and costly to diagnose and treat, calling for efforts to develop new antibiotics — and ways to deliver them - along with improved diagnostic tools that can be used in low-resource settings and alternative vaccination strategies.

"For example, we can make trehalose-based imaging probes that 'light up' living bacteria and may be useful for medical diagnostics in the future, helping clinicians to quickly identify TB-positive patients," Swarts said.

He and Woodruff have successfully developed a new method of detecting the presence of M. tuberculosis, using a naturally occurring enzyme and water, for rapidly synthesizing a broad variety of trehalose derivatives.

As a result, they have an unmatched ability to make and test a new class of compounds and have filed a provisional patent on their method.

Swarts said that CMU undergraduate students have been pivotal in the success of the project and the attainment of the NIH grant to keep it going.

Midland junior and biomedical sciences major Bailey Urbanek was one of the lead team's research.

Urbanek said that being included as part of the scientific writing process and the opportunity to present the research at professional meetings makes her feel that her involvement and work is having a direct impact on the global scientific community.

"I know undergraduate research isn't a hands-on privilege at every university," Urbanek said. "I feel that I have an advantage over my peers at other institutions, and I know that being involved in this research has been one of the most significant, influential opportunities that I have had at Central."

The NIH grant will allow several other CMU undergraduates to join Urbanek in the lab work by funding several summer researchers for the next three years. It also provides funding support for a CMU graduate student.

In addition, the grant also will strengthen CMU scientists' research capabilities to investigate infectious diseases because a portion of it will be used to fund equipment co-authors on the initial publication of the for a Biosafety Level 3 laboratory in CMU's new $95 million Biosciences Building, currently under construction and scheduled to open for classes in January 2017.

> "The BSL3 lab will make it possible for us to conduct research on M. tuberculosis itself rather than similar model organisms," Swarts said. "Research on the actual bacterium will lead to data that will be more relevant to direct clinical translation."

> The National Institutes of Health, a part of the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, is the nation's medical research agency - making important discoveries that improve health and save lives.

> It is the largest source of funding for medical research in the world, creating numerous high-quality jobs by funding thousands of scientists in universities and research institutions in every state across America and around the globe.

Detroit to Co-host InternationalCompetition Highlighting STEM SkillsMichigan Teen Earns 3 CollegeDegrees in High School

Gov. Rick Snyder

Lansing - Michigan, already a national leader in FIRST Robotics teams, has been named as one of two hosts for FIRST championship events from 2018 to 2020, bringing teams from around the world to Detroit.

Gov. Rick Snyder recently applauded the announcement that FIRST Robotics has named Detroit as one of two cities to host international championship events for three years.

Starting in 2018, championship activities are to be held at Cobo Center and Ford Field. Houston will be the other host city during those three years.

"Michigan has long been a global leader in design and engineering, and FIRST Robotics is a program that is inspiring the next generation of innovators," Snyder said.

"We're excited to show off Michigan's talented students and the companies and universities that support them through FIRST Robotics.

"It's also great that people from around the world will be visiting Detroit, the comeback city, and seeing firsthand the exciting things happening there."

FIRST Robotics programs are collaborations between schools and experts in the field, where they work together to design and build robots for competitions, learning to solve challenging problems and gaining in-demand skills that can lead to rewarding careers.

Michigan is a national leader with 345 FIRST Robotics teams – 107 more teams than California -- and 77 rookie teams this year.

The state supports the teams through $2 million in grants as an effort to encourage students to study science, technology, engineering and math. The teams play a big role in state efforts to lead the nation in building a talented workforce.

The championship event includes competitions in all four FIRST Robotics programs and is projected to generate as much as $90 million in economic impact over the three years.

Teams can qualify for the international competition through state competitions held each April.

Flint - The town of Flint, Michigan is home to an amazing young woman. At just 19 years of age, Jasmine Cofield has accomplished more than many do in an entire lifetime.

She graduated from high school last year but before she was handed her diploma she already had three college degrees under her belt. She is currently a senior at Central Michigan University.

This year she was named the 2015 Newman Civic Fellow. The award is handed out to college students that demonstrate empathy for others. They also show they are capable of finding real-world solutions to problems that affect the communities around them and make sure they help the community by implementing those solutions.

This year Cofield will be traveling with Global Bridges to Honduras to volunteer in clinics that provide much-needed services to the communities that are struggling with health issues.

She has been all over the country with a program called the Alternative Break program which is sponsored by the Mary Ellen Brandell Volunteer Center. With this group, Cofield has helped to rebuild homes that were destroyed in the South by Hurricane Katrina. Also, she has helped in facilities that treat HIV/AIDS patients in Atlanta by helping to restore the facilities to a more modern place.

While attending Mott Middle College, which is where she completed all of her high school courses, Cofield also studied at Mott Community College.

The Middle College is a transitional program that integrates high school classes and college classes. The students end up graduating from the Middle College with a high school diploma and 15 college credits.

Cofield ended up with three Associate degrees from Mott Community College before she even got her diploma.

She kept a 4.0 average all through college and ended high school with a 3.97 GPA. She did so well in her schooling that she earned enough money in scholarships to cover her Bachelor's degree studies at Central Michigan University.

She is studying to become a Physician's Assistant in Neuroscience. http://www.theblackhomeschool.com/

Intersection-of Business &-Wealth President Obama Launches $70 Million Program to Support Young Entrepreneurs in the US, Latin America, and the Caribbean

Kingston, Jamaica - Recently, President Obama launched the Young Leaders of the Americas Initiative (YLAI) to expand opportunities for emerging entrepreneurs and civil society activists.

Building on the success of the President's young leader initiatives in sub-Saharan Africa and Southeast Asia, YLAI will incubate and accelerate the work of young business and civil society leaders from Latin America, the Caribbean, and the United States.

YLAI will provide 250 fellowships each year to enable participants from the United States and the region to develop joint business and civil society initiatives.

The preponderance of the fellowships will take place at universities, incubators, and non-governmental organizations across the United States, while follow-on exchanges will send Americans to Latin America and the Caribbean to continue the collaboration.

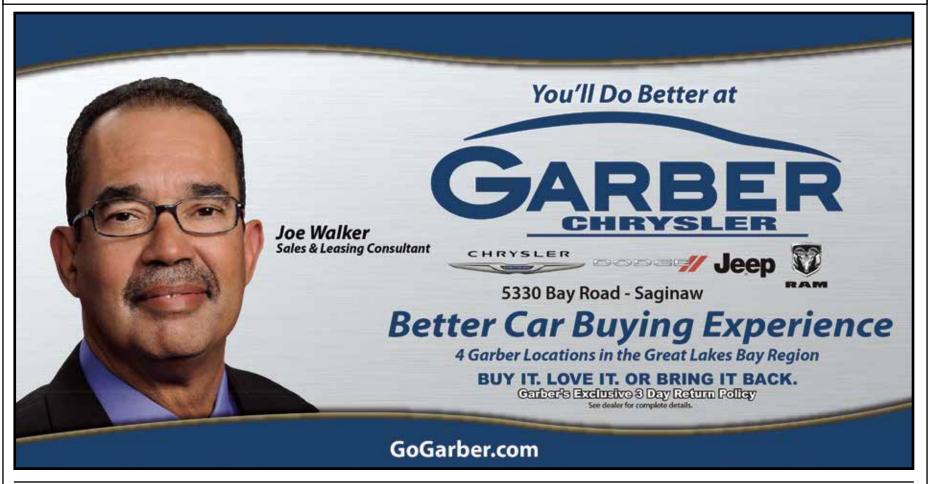

YLAI fellows will receive ongoing support through a continuum of networking, mentorship, and investment opportunities. Fifty-eight percent of the population in Latin America and the Caribbean is under 35. Despite important economic gains over the last decade, significant challenges – including limited access to jobs, capital, and advanced educational opportunities, and the availability of illicit employment opportunities – hold many youth back from reaching their full potential.

YLAI will help address the opportunity gap for youth, especially women, by empowering entrepreneurs and civil society leaders with the training, tools, networks, and resources they need to transform their societies and contribute more fully to economic development and prosperity, security, human rights, and good governance in the hemisphere.

FROM P 18, President Obama Launches Program...

Building linkages between young leaders across the hemisphere is a central objective of the initiative. Through its fellowships, YLAI aims to foster over 50 formal business and civil society partnerships each year between emerging entrepreneurial and civil society entities in Latin America and the Caribbean with their counterparts in the United States.

YLAI Goals: Connections, Co-Creation, and Contributing to Growth

As part of the President's Spark Global Entrepreneurship initiative, YLAI will contribute to the United States' global goal of generating $1 billion dollars for emerging business and social entrepreneurs by the end of 2017, by helping fellows attract new support, investments, and in-kind resources for their business or organization each year.

For startup businesses, social enterprises, and civil society organizations, this infusion of funding, resources, and support will play a critical role in enabling their development, expansion, and sustainability.

The YLAI Fellowship: Building Business and Social Innovations

The fellowship will include six weeks of training, immersion at an incubator, accelerator, or civil society organization, and a summit in Washington, D.C. to facilitate mentoring, networking, and investment opportunities.

The summit will provide participants with the opportunity to showcase their initiatives and attract new investments, learn from others, network with leading figures in their field, as well as hear from top business, government, and civil society leaders.

YLAI will provide participants returning to their countries and communities with access to virtual resources, training, mentoring, and, most importantly, platforms to continue their collaboration. The first class of 250 fellows will begin in 2016.

The YLAI Pilot: Focus on Technology

YLAI will commence in 2015 with a pilot program involving 24 participants from Latin America and the Caribbean, including Cuba.

The pilot program will focus on the creation and expansion of business and civil society initiatives that utilize technology by embedding participants in incubators and accelerators across the United States.

Participants will work on new technological applications that their host company or organization uses or seeks to develop.

American participants will also have the opportunity to travel to their counterparts' countries as part of the pilot program. Interested applicants can sign up for updates on the fellowship on the YLAI ShareAmerica page: http://share.america.gov/ylai

FAA Gives Amazon Green Light to Test Delivery Drones

By Brian Fung

Wash. - Aviation regulators gave Amazon the green light to begin testing its Prime Air drones in the United States — a decision that, together with a new federal approval process, could pave the way for other companies interested in drone delivery.

The Federal Aviation Administration told Amazon recently that it will be free to conduct research and development on drone technology, with certain restrictions.

Amazon's drones can't fly higher than 400 feet or faster than 100 miles per hour. They'll also have to remain within the drone operator's direct line of sight, fly only during the day and operate over private property.

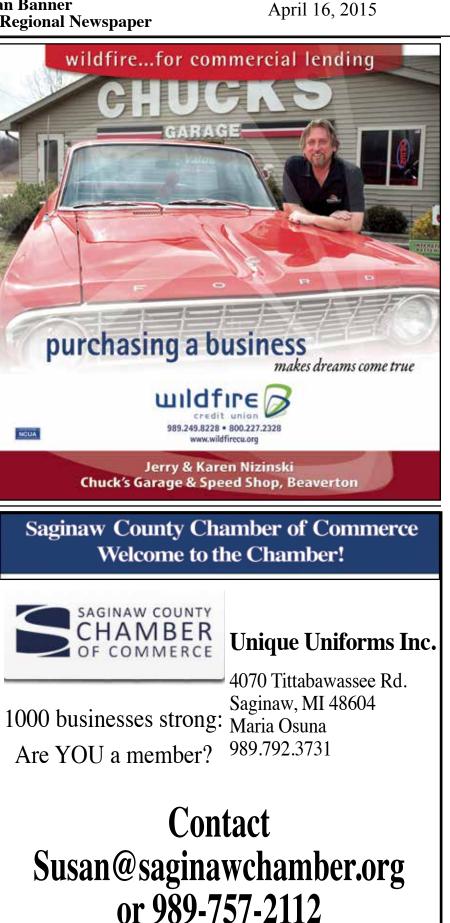

The two-year exemption lets Amazon push ahead with its plans to ship small packages by a drone. The company hopes cutting the wait time between order and delivery will encourage consumers to buy more online.

Now that Amazon has received approval for research and development for a drone delivery, others wishing to do the same might get expedited treatment under the summary grant process. But, FAA spokesman Les Dorr said, each application will be evaluated individually.

Health "Better Choices, Better Medicine, Better Healing"

Get Up Again!

By Melissa Lee Communications Specialist & Social Marketing Coordinator Saginaw County Community Mental Health Authority Saginaw MAX System of Care

Saginaw - Most people don't believe me when I tell them that I dropped out of college at one point. When I follow that up with details about debilitating anxiety and depression being the culprit of my academic woes, they look at me like they're waiting for me to deliver a poorly executed punch line. It usually takes a solid 30 seconds before people realize that I'm being 100% honest with them.

I can't blame them for their initial skepticism - I like to think of myself as an overall bubbly, and outgoing person and that's the version of me that most people have come to know. But there was a point in my life when the sound of my alarm clock would induce nauseating panic attacks.

It seems only fitting now that I find myself working for Saginaw County Community Mental Health Authority and Saginaw MAX System of Care in a position where I can share my story and advocate for those who are experiencing some of the same struggles I went through.

If you take anything away from my story, I hope it's that you should never judge a book by its cover. Just because someone is struggling now doesn't mean that they will be struggling forever, and just because someone is successful and flourishing right now doesn't mean they haven't known struggle and pain.

More importantly, I hope people struggling and stumbling through their own journey at the moment won't ever stop getting up when they fall.

I grew up in a great environment. I enjoyed school, was involved in extracurricular activities, had a wide variety of friends and loving, involved is Melissa, it's nice to meet you! parents. By all accounts, my life was set up for a successful future of whatever I could dream for myself.

But mental illness doesn't discriminate against age, sex, race, religion, or economic status. You could have every resource at your disposal and still develop a mental illness in the same way someone who has no resources can develop one. The same way the richest man in the world can develop the same cancer as the poorest man in the world.

For years after my initial diagnosis of depression and anxiety, my life was a rollercoaster of highs, lows, and plateaus. There was medication trial and error, therapists, and the development of severe panic attacks before I found a longterm sense of stability.

This period of my life was marked by dropping out of college, no sense of direction and feelings of complete failure. But my support system had been always by my side through it all. When I didn't want to get up after falling on my face again and again, they supported me until I found an inner strength to stand up on my own.

Eventually, I went back to school, first to a local community college and then to the same university that I dropped out of years earlier. I graduated in 2010 with a bachelor's degree and a sense of accomplishment that I would never have found if I hadn't had the support system and strength to get up time and time again.

My journey hasn't been easy, and the road ahead will no doubt have bumps and detours that I can't even imagine right now. But, I have this sense of peace knowing that my past has prepared me for whatever my future holds.

My mental illness has not made me weak, but stronger than I ever would have been without it. If you've never personally known someone with a mental illness, now you do. Hi, my name

I hope I've helped you understand that mental illness is nothing to be afraid or weary of - we're all just human beings trying to find our way in the world when it comes right down to it. If you've struggled with mental illness yourself at some point, I'm proud of you for pushing back and finding your way.

Keep up the good fight. And if you're struggling right now, don't you dare give up. You are not alone, and you will get through this. Reach out for help--don't try to carry this burden alone.

If you don't know who to turn to or feel like you don't have anyone in your corner, call me. I firmly believe one can never have too many friends, and I'd be honored to call you a friend of mine.

But no matter what you do, get up again. Your struggles and falls don't define you, I'm proof of that.

Melissa Lee

Earlier columns address things to consider when hiring; they are available online at our blog www.FUNdraising-GoodTimes.com. In this column, we offer five questions to ask during the interview process. A candidate's responses can provide insights to help you determine who is best qualified to help you meet your fundraising goals.

1. How do you feel about asking for money? This is really at the core of fundraising. Feelings about money - and people who have money - color many people consciousness and can interfere with fundraising.

Pastor Tony Evans: We Can't Use the Reality of Racial Divide to Condone Irresponsibility in the Black Community

By Samuel Smith The Christian Post

Tenn. - In his final remarks during a Thursday panel discussing racial reconciliation in America and the importance of urban ministry, African-American pastor, author and syndicated radio broadcaster Tony Evans boldly stated that many of the issues surrounding race in America stem from the social irresponsibility of those within the African-American community.

Speaking at the Ethics & Religious Liberty Commission's Leadership Summit in Nashville, Tennessee, Evans asserted that although the responsibility to alleviate the racial divide also lies with the church and other racial classes who must hold government accountable to change an unjust justice system, black Americans cannot use the existence of racial tensions to justify careless or irresponsible actions.

"There is another side here that needs to be brought to bear and that is black accountability. Because while we want to have the sensibility that we are talking about, and we must have it, we cannot use the reality of race to condone irresponsibility," Evans explained. "Much that goes under the name of race has to do with black irresponsibility."

Evans added that although racial stigmas and assumptions about black people clearly exist in the minds of others, it is not racial tension that causes African-Americans many of the social and financial hardships they endure.

"It is not race getting these girls pregnant. It is not race abandoning the family. It's not race for those refusing to work and being responsible," Evans continued.

"Even if all the whites did everything right, there is a responsibility on our side to make sure, as leaders, we are holding black people accountable and they are not illegitimately using race as an excuse to promote it, or even allow it, or even sanction it, or even to whine about it."

Even though creating a better racial environment in America will require effort and reconciliation from all races, Evans said that African-Americans still need to do their part to address these issues in order to fully solve racial problems.

"Without those two sides, then what you get is an unbalanced approach to the subject. It shows up in a lot of different ways," Evans contended. "Unless we address both of those sides, then we will not address the whole issue, and we need to address the whole issue."

Although Evans admitted that the racial divide in America will never fully be eliminated, that doesn't mean that the community can't strive to improve the issues as much as they can.

"When the Dallas Cowboys play any other football team, there is going to be 11 other men that will oppose you. That is the nature of the reality. They are going to try to stop your progress. Your greatness is in your ability to outmaneuver them and still score," Evans said. "So we may never get rid of racism, but that doesn't mean that we can't call plays that still work and be responsible for progressing in spite of that reality, while at the same time, trying to address it." Dean Inserra, a white pastor at the City Church in Tallahassee, Florida, who also spoke on the panel, said responsibility to help bridge the racial gap also lies on the trendy affluent Caucasians who move into inner cities because they think it is cool.

Inserra further explained that one of the problems is that affluent white people, even white Christians, are moving into inner cities for the wrong reasons.

Inserra said if more people moving into inner cities would take it as an opportunity to get to know and worship with the struggling urban African-American communities, it would build a more trusting relationship.

Inserra explained that too often many well-off individuals move into cities looking for the "urban" experience, but not looking to fulfill the Great Commission. He added that white Christians who live in the inner city shouldn't be going to church with a congregation full of white people.

"Many people say that the church is the most segregated place in America. I believe that to be true, but what is the result of that? The second and the third places are the neighborhood and the school," Inserra said.

"We need to get back to the mission of the church, and it is to make disciples where people are. If that is urban or suburban or in between, or rural or international, it's about reaching people for Christ that live there.

"If you are a white pastor that goes to Seattle because it's just so cool and you love tofu and bands that nobody has ever heard of before, we mean urban ministry, not Urban Outfitters. They are two different things," Inserra quipped.

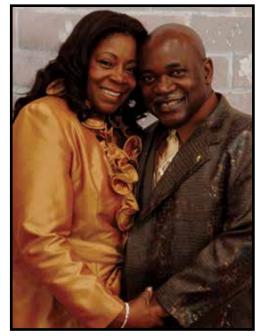

"If you are going to a big city... and everybody in your church congregation looks like you, we are missing the boat somewhere on what is urban ministry because you actually got to reach the people that live there where you are sent."

Lebron James, Devon Still Honor Inspiring Teen Lauren Hill with Moving Tributes

By Jose Oliveros

Ohio - Lauren Hill, the 19-year-old who inspired many during her brave fight against cancer, lost her battle to that terrible disease on Friday.

Affected by an inoperable brain tumor, Hill did not let the disease dictate how she was going to live her life. She was a perfect example of a person who lived life her way, despite being courage, power, leadership, etc etc! Your affected by illness.

Hill once stated in an interview with the AP, "I'm spreading awareness and also teaching people how to live in the moment because the next moment's not promised. Anything can happen at any given moment. What matters is right now.

"Especially after this kind of diagnosis, your perspective on life and what you value changes."

Hill brought the lack of funding for cancer research to the masses. NCAA president Mark Emmert released a statement regarding her untimely death, "Lauren Hill's bravery, enthusiasm and strength were an inspiration not only to those who knew her best but also to the millions of people she touched around the world by sharing her story.

Lauren achieved a lasting and meaningful legacy, and her beautiful spirit will continue to live on. Our hearts go out to her family, friends, teammates and coaches."

LeBron James also posted a wonderful letter to Lauren on his Facebook page.

Dear Lauren Hill,

You are the true definition of strength, time spent on earth will never be forgotten.

I hate that I never got the chance to meet u in person but know you inspired me the whole time! For every life u touched, u made the biggest impact of them by just being YOU!!

You're in a far better place now and please don't have too much fun up there w/o all your family and friends. Can u please tell my Grandma I said hello. Don't be afraid, she knows you cause we spoke about u plenty of times.

Until we officially meet again, take care and continue to be that LEADER we all love! #RIPLaurenHill

Sincerely, LeBron James

i and go-getter

For Lauren Little, it's all about making connections. The rhetoric and professional writing major spends her summers volunteering and works during the school year giving tours as a Club Red ambassador and an Orientation Leader. "A student's mom came up to me years after she took a campus tour, and she wanted to say hi," Lauren said. "That's the kind of connection I want to make."

Lauren hopes to go on to pursue a master's degree in Chicago and eventually to run her own public relations firm. Waking every day at 5:30 a.m., Lauren organizes her life around running, but ask her, and she'll tell you that learning is the top priority. "Education is my all, and SVSU is truly home for me; it makes it that much easier for me to love what I do every day. I simply love everything it has to offer — the campus life and all the opportunities for growth."

Prospective or transfer students can check out SVSU by taking a campus tour and meeting with an admissions representative. Call (989) 964-4200 or email admissions@svsu.edu.
